Georgetown University in Qatar (GU-Q) recently hosted a public event titled “International Law at a Crossroads? Recent ICJ & ICC Developments and Their Global Impact,” featuring a thought-provoking conversation with internationally renowned legal experts Diana Buttu and Dr. Ralph Wilde.

The panel examined recent groundbreaking decisions by the International Court of Justice (ICJ) and the International Criminal Court (ICC) that are reshaping global discourse on state and individual accountability. The discussion also addressed the upcoming ICJ Advisory Opinion on Obligations of States with Respect to Climate Change and governmental obligations concerning the presence and activities of the United Nations, other international organizations, and third states within countries.

The conversation, moderated by Noha Aboueldahab, Assistant Professor of International Law at GU-Q, reflected on the broader implications of these legal developments highlighting how public international law is being tested in addressing contemporary crises.

Diana Buttu, a lawyer specializing in negotiations, international law, and human rights, offered valuable insights into legal accountability in context. Drawing on her experience as a former legal advisor on inter-country peace negotiations, Buttu provided a unique perspective on the intersection of public international law and global diplomacy.

“While the international legal system has gotten better over time, the big problem is the lack of a global sovereign. And so when you don’t have a global sovereign, it means that we are left to the devices of what individual states want,” she explained.

Ralph Wilde, a Professor of International Law at University College London (UCL), brought his expertise on public law and extraterritorial human rights to the discussion. His extensive scholarship explores legal accountability and the protection of human rights in the international arena. “The only way to understand international law as Law is in terms of the role of states in ensuring compliance,” he said, adding: “When one state in particular is violating international law, the manifestation of the international community is so important.”

Now celebrating its 20th Anniversary, the event was part of GU-Q’s ongoing commitment to fostering informed dialogue on pressing global issues and advancing academic and public understanding of the evolving role of international law in global concerns.
