Milwaukee, April 25 – A local judge has been arrested by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) for allegedly obstructing a federal immigration operation, sparking nationwide attention and scrutiny.

According to initial details, the judge—whose identity has not yet been officially released—allegedly misdirected federal agents during a planned arrest of an undocumented immigrant. The operation, part of a broader immigration enforcement effort, was reportedly compromised due to the judge's intervention.

FBI Director Kash Patel commented on the incident in a post on X (formerly Twitter), stating that the bureau believed the judge had "intentionally misdirected federal agents." Although the post was later deleted, it had already generated widespread reactions from legal and political circles.

The arrest has raised concerns over judicial conduct and the limits of authority within immigration enforcement. Legal experts say the case could set a precedent for how courts interact with federal agencies during such operations.

The Department of Justice has yet to comment officially on the nature of the charges. However, internal sources suggest the investigation had been underway for several weeks, with the judge under surveillance over suspected coordination with immigrant rights groups.

Civil rights organizations have expressed concern over the arrest, warning it could discourage lawful oversight of federal operations. Meanwhile, immigration advocates have called for transparency and due process in the unfolding legal proceedings.

The case is expected to move quickly through the federal court system, with a preliminary hearing anticipated in the coming days.
