The Mianwali Police have become a beacon of progressive community engagement in Punjab, as effective law enforcement has surpassed traditional policing. Under the leadership of Inspector General Punjab Dr. Usman Anwar and District Police Officer Captain (Retd.) Rai Muhammad Ajmal, the district has witnessed a paradigm shift towards inclusive, educational, and citizen-centric policing.

Central to this transformation is the “Friends of Police Youth Internship Program,” a flagship initiative designed to bridge the gap between the police force and the younger generation. This program offers students a unique opportunity to gain firsthand insight into police operations, fostering mutual respect and understanding. As of recent reports, over 20,000 students across Punjab have participated in this initiative, reflecting its widespread impact and success.

A notable highlight of this program was the recent visit by the Friends of Police Youth Internship Team to the Allama Iqbal Open University (AIU) Mianwali Campus. Led by Sub-Inspector Taimoor Awan and Inspector Zarar Khan (Public Relations Officer), the team conducted informative sessions on digital responsibility, cybersecurity, and online etiquette. These sessions aimed to equip students with essential knowledge to navigate the digital landscape safely and responsibly, addressing the growing concerns of cyber threats in today’s interconnected world.

Beyond educational outreach, the Mianwali Police have implemented several initiatives to modernize and humanize policing in the district. The establishment of a Model Police Station stands as a testament to their commitment to changing the traditional police culture, emphasizing transparency, efficiency, and community involvement.

Furthermore, the police have introduced specialized centers such as the Special Initiatives Police Stations (SIPS), Tahaffuz Markaz, Misaq Centres, and Police Khidmat Marakiz. These centers are designed to address specific community needs, from providing support to vulnerable populations to facilitating citizen services, thereby enhancing the overall trust between the police and the public.

The proactive approach of the Mianwali Police aligns with global best practices in community policing, emphasizing collaboration, transparency, and proactive engagement. By involving citizens, especially the youth, in policing processes, they are not only fostering a sense of ownership and responsibility but also ensuring that law enforcement remains responsive and attuned to the community's needs.

In conclusion, the initiatives undertaken by the Mianwali Police serve as a model for modern policing, demonstrating how law enforcement agencies can effectively engage with communities to build trust, enhance safety, and promote civic responsibility. Their efforts underscore the importance of evolving policing strategies to meet the challenges of the 21st century, ensuring that the police force remains a pillar of support and security for all citizens.
