Iran has the capability to strike Israel daily for two years without depleting its missile stockpiles, according to Major General Ebrahim Jabbari, a senior adviser to Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC).

In an interview with Iran's semi-official Mehr News Agency, Jabbari stated, "Our armed forces are at the peak of readiness. The size of our missile warehouses and underground bases is such that much of our defense capacity remains undisclosed.”

He further warned that even in the event of a war with Israel and the United States, Iran’s missile reserves are sufficient to maintain daily attacks for two consecutive years. The remarks underscore Iran’s efforts to project strategic deterrence amid heightened tensions in the region.
