The most essential condition for success in any field is that a person dedicates himself to that field.

Every matter of life is like a candle and in this matter the person who yearns the most for that candle will advance the most. Life is a business of transactions, here the giver gets and gets as much as he gives . Here it is not possible to receive without giving, nor is it possible for a person to become partaker of more by giving less. No success is possible in this world without great hard work. Strive is essential for achieving success i.e. making the effort that is prescribed by divine law for the desired goal. This is the principle for the success of this world and for the success of the hereafter. Along with this, giving up, accepting your defeat, this is the process that leads to the path of success. An American man ventured into business in 1831, and failed. In 1832, he participated in national politics, but there too he was defeated. In 1834 he ventured again but this time he failed to operate the business. In 1841 his nerves became weak. In 1843, he again entered politics. He hoped that this time his party would nominate him as a member of the Congress. But in the end, his hope could not be fulfilled, his name did not appear in the list of candidates of the party. In 1855, he had the opportunity to stand for the Senate for the first time, but he lost the election. In 1858, he stood again in the election of the Senate and was again defeated. This repeated failure was Abraham Lincoln, who was elected president of the United States in 1860. He did so much work in the construction of America that today he is considered as the architect of the new America. How did Abraham Lincoln get such a big name in the national and political history of America and how did he reach this high position? He knew how to admit defeat.. Realism is the greatest secret of life and giving up is the highest form of realism. Giving up means that you accept the fact that you are not ahead of others but behind others. If you understand your failure and fight it consistently, then this failure will become your success.
