Türkiye is maintaining “cautious optimism” despite ongoing regional tensions and efforts by some actors, including Israel, to reignite conflict, President Recep Tayyip Erdogan said on Friday.

Speaking at the “Century of Türkiye – Strong Hub for Investment” event at the Dolmabahce

Presidential Office in Istanbul, President Recep Tayyip Erdogan said neither the region nor the world can return to the past order, warning that the consequences of current fractures will become clearer over time.

Erdogan noted that Türkiye is closely following developments while emphasizing a balanced and measured approach to regional instability. He said Ankara remains committed to stability amid what he described as one of the most serious security crises in recent years.

“By successfully managing one of the biggest security crises of recent years, Türkiye has once again confirmed and cemented its status as an island of stability in its region,” he added.

The Turkish president underlined that despite escalating tensions and renewed conflict dynamics, Türkiye continues to prioritize diplomatic caution and regional balance.
