One person was killed and five others injured after a shooting in central Israel on Sunday, according to Israeli authorities. The incident occurred at three locations in the Kochav Ya'ir area near the West Bank border, security sources said. Military officials said forces were deployed and the suspected attacker was neutralized at the scene. The suspect's condition was not immediately clear while searches for possible additional attackers are ongoing. Israel's Magen David Adom emergency service said a 35-year-old man was pronounced dead, and five injured people were taken to hospitals including one in serious condition. Authorities described the incident as a suspected terror attack and said security operations continue in surrounding areas amid heightened alert following the violence. Further updates will be provided as investigations progress officials said in a statement on Sunday Sunday report
